Friends and family console each other Thursday afternoon after Jasen Scott Ramirez was gunned down by U.S. marshals outside of St. James Catholic Church in Douglas.

At a funeral, a family's grief doubles over

U.S. marshals shot and killed a Colorado man outside his father's funeral in Douglas June 30, rocking the community and leaving friends and family stunned as their place of mourning that warm afternoon was transformed into a scene of fresh torment.

Outside of Douglas' St. James Catholic Church, dozens watched as Jasen Scott Ramirez, 44, took his final breaths in the parking lot. He was later pronounced dead at Memorial Hospital of Converse County.

As others went to the basement of the church for a reception, friends and family say that a distraught Ramirez left the funeral and was headed to his car when he was approached by undercover law enforcement and shot.

Witnesses said it appeared Ramirez was unarmed and he was shot multiple times by law enforcement wearing plain clothes as he was getting into a red sedan.

The U.S. Marshal Service released a brief statement on Friday, confirming that they were involved in the shooting and that

Wyoming is getting more diverse

According to Census, minorities grew by 19 percent in state

By Nick Balatsos

Wyoming — one of the top 10 whitest states in the country — is becoming a little more diverse and a little older, according to the latest data estimates released by the U.S. Census Bureau earlier this month.

The new estimates show that while the state's population grew 4 percent from the last decennial census to July 2015 the number of minorities in the state outpaced that overall growth six times over.

All told, minorities grew by almost 15,000 people or roughly 19 percent, in the past five years. Combined, minorities reached a total of 94,000 people in the state who identified as a race other than non-Hispanic and white.

Hispanics comprised the largest minority group in July 2015 with 58,207 people. Over the five-year span, they grew 16 percent.

The black population, which is a much smaller group with just 7,200 people in the state, grew at a much faster clip, seeing a 66

Shooting_____

From the Front Page

Douglas police officers stand outside St. James Catholic Church after taping off the crime scene in the parking lot Thursday afternoon in Douglas.

Ramirez was wanted for a drug charge. They didn’t say whether Ramirez was armed, nor the reason he was shot, citing an active investigation. But they noted that the Wyoming Division of Criminal Investigation would lead the probe into the shooting. DCI spokesman Frosty Williams said that the agency would release its findings to the Converse County Attorney’s Office once the investigation was complete, but he was unsure of a timeline.

According to a federal indictment, Ramirez was wanted for allegedly selling 1.8 ounces of meth and possessing a revolver during a March 13 drug deal. It was illegal for Ramirez to have the gun because of a past felony conviction for drugs.

Renel Cisneros, who has been a friend of the family for almost two decades, said that family members were destroyed by the shooting.

Cisneros said she saw the officers who shot him when she entered the church a little after 1 p.m. She was running late, and as she walked in, she said there were people in a vehicle who looked “out of place.”

She remembers seeing Ramirez in the front of the church, sobbing. He didn’t stand up for communion, she said, because he was too upset, as he and his father, Joe Ramirez, were close.

When the shooting happened, Cisneros was outside. She said she was about to walk over and give Ramirez a hug when she heard the noise of bullets ripping through the air. She looked over and saw Ramirez leaning from the passenger side of a bullet-riddled car. He appeared lifeless. She estimated at least six or seven shots fired.

Cisneros and a cousin, who asked not to be named, said Ramirez’ hands were empty and that officers shot and tasered him. Officials have declined to say whether that’s true.

Converse County sheriff deputies and Douglas police officers attempted to revive Ramirez afterward, but it was too late.

Another cousin, who asked not to be named, was outraged. She said it felt like hours before officials began CPR.

“They just let him lie there,” she said. “The hospital is right there,” she added, pointing down the block. “They should have called for an ambulance sooner. They wanted him to die!” she said, tears rolling down her cheeks.

Cisneros was upset, too. But like many, she was also confused. “Why did they have to do it there?” she asked herself.

Cisneros said Ramirez was “a good guy, a sweetheart.”

He had run into trouble with the law, she admitted, but as far as she knew, he was trying to get his life together.

After Ramirez was shot, the quiet residential neighborhood was transformed into a nightmarish scene. Officers from more than nine federal and state agencies swarmed the church grounds, as family members, already dressed for a funeral, cried out at the scene. Rumors of an unconfirmed threat against law enforcement prompted the sheriff’s office to place the nearby hospital, courthouse and city hall on lockdown.

A Wyoming highway patrolman speeding to the scene crashed with another vehicle around Glenrock. Both drivers were taken to the hospital and later released. (See related story on the front page.)

Meanwhile, at the church, a statue of Saint Mary was cordoned off with yellow crime scene tape. Church officials were disturbed by the situation.

Bishop Paul Etienne of the Catholic Diocese of Cheyenne issued this statement:

“We are saddened by the untimely loss of life in any circumstance. But the fact that this happened following a funeral liturgy when friends and family members were already grieving and outside of a house of worship, where people seek solace, makes this situation all the more troubling.

“Even in the face of growing violence in our culture, we expect as a civil society, and encourage as a community of faith, that we make a stronger commitment to peaceful resolutions and enforcement of laws and a demonstration of greater respect for human life and the common good.”

At Sunday morning mass, Bishop Etienne joined Father Bill Hill at St. James to address the shooting directly. He said it’s important to respect law enforcement, but he struggled with the way in which the church was targeted and the way other holy places have been targeted in the past.

He appeared lifeless. She estimated at least six or seven shots fired.

Trio arrested on drug charges to appear in court

By Nick Balatsos
nick@glenrockind.com

The three men arrested in Glenrock on suspicion of drug charges in late June are scheduled to appear in Converse County Circuit Court next Monday.

Jeremy Lee Cantelberry, 38, of Casper; Thomas Kelly, 22; of Casper; and Justin Gibson, 25, of Kansas were each arrested June 21 on marijuana possession charges.

Glenrock Police Chief Tim Hurd said that the arrest occurred after he noticed a suspicious vehicle driving down the road. He said that at first it looked like the driver was wearing a ski mask, but it turned out to be a winter beanie.

Nonetheless, as he watched the truck drive down one of Glenrock’s main streets, he saw it make a turn without using a signal. When he jumped in his patrol vehicle to stop the vehicle, he saw that it made another illegal turn on Sixth Street. As he approached the vehicle, he said he thought he could smell burned marijuana. He asked the driver of the blue Chevy, Cantelberry, for the vehicle’s registration and insurance, but the driver couldn’t provide it, he said. In fact, nobody in the car could tell Hurd who owned the car.

Hurd said that while patting down one of the men, Kelly, he thought he felt a gun in his pocket. The object turned out to be a drug pipe. Hurd said it had a white residue on it “consistent with cocaine or meth.”

A subsequent search of the vehicle found approximately six ounces of marijuana that appeared to have been purchased legally in Colorado. They were placed under arrest and brought to Converse County Detention Center, from which they were later released on bond. They will be arraigned on July 11. Hurd said that the arrest was a group effort.

“We came together as a team, which is what I’m really proud of,” he said. “We’re all there for each other.”

Crash

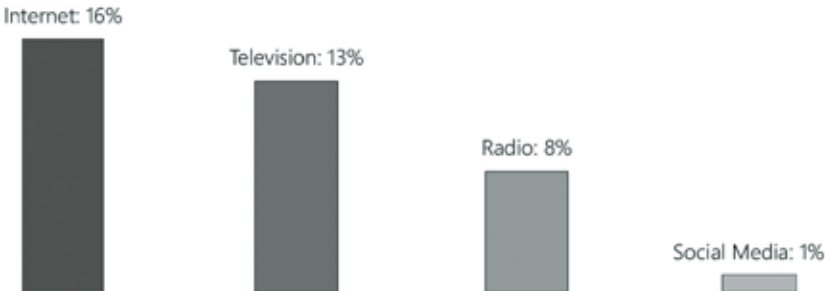

From the Front Page

Eldred’s lights and siren were activated on his Dodge Charger as he sped toward the scene, where multiple other agencies, both federal and local, had responded.
Officials say Eldred was passing eastbound traffic on US 20/26, near mile marker 163, when he hit Belgard, who was driving a 2002 Jeep SUV and turning in front of him into the parking lot of a business.
WHP officials say Eldred hit his emergency brake and turned his vehicle toward the north ditch in an attempt to avoid hitting Belgard, but the two vehicles nonetheless crashed into each other as Eldred entered the ditch.
The impact caused Eldred’s patrol car to roll “a minimum of four times” and spun Belgard’s Jeep until it came to a rest in the westbound lane of US 20/26. Belgard’s Jeep was facing west, according to officials.
Belgard was transported to Wyoming Medical Center in Casper by ambulance.
She was released later that night, according to officials.
Eldred was flown by helicopter to the same hospital. He was released on July 1
Waggener said the trooper was expected to make a full recovery, but wouldn’t elaborate on his injuries, citing privacy concerns.
He said no citations were issued after the crash.
The highway was briefly closed during the incident as emergency personell responded.
WHP officials credit Eldred’s seat belt and ballistic vest use, vehicle safety design and the patrol car’s prisoner transport safety cage for minimizing his injuries.
Officials say that the day before the crash Eldred attended a WHP sponsored safety training program called “Below 100.”
Below 100 is a program designed to minimize officer deaths.
Wearing seat belts and ballistic vests and preparing for traffic to turn left in front of you during emergency responses are three main points emphasized in the Below 100 program, according to officials.

Making a case for us

Every year that I’ve been a reporter, in every community I’ve covered, there’s been at least one officer-involved shooting, which is a sort of twisted phrase repeated by reporters for a variety of reasons, some justifiable, some not, to indicate without indicating that a life has been quickly ended and that there’s a death surrounded by questions.

Now, I’ll never pretend to understand how difficult or complex a law enforcement officer’s job is — or how difficult or painful the decision to pull the trigger might be — but what I can say is that in every case there have been commonalities that disturb me.

Most of the people killed have been poor.
Usually brown.
Often with criminal backgrounds.
In a matter of seconds.
And in every community, people have responded quickly, without the facts, without even a thirst for the facts, saying that the person deserved to die because of his or her background.
And they’ve been written off, forgotten, just like that.
Thursday was no different.
I don’t have all the facts, either.
Because of the opacity of the law, I doubt I, nor the public, ever will.

But after talking to friends and family members of the man killed tonight, hearing their tears, feeling a sliver of their pain, I again can’t help but wish that as a society we were less ready to assign blame and neat narratives with villains and heroes and more willing to expend the energy required to empathize and realize that reality and justice are more complicated than we’re willing to admit but nonetheless obtainable.

To imagine ourselves in the shoes of the deceased.

To realize that there are friends and family whose lives will be forever changed.
To realize that things could have been different.
That maybe someone didn’t have to die.
That maybe, somewhere along the line, there were simple things that could have tilted the course of events.

That this person wasn’t “one of them.”
That there isn’t a “them.”
That no matter a person’s history, there’s only an “us.”

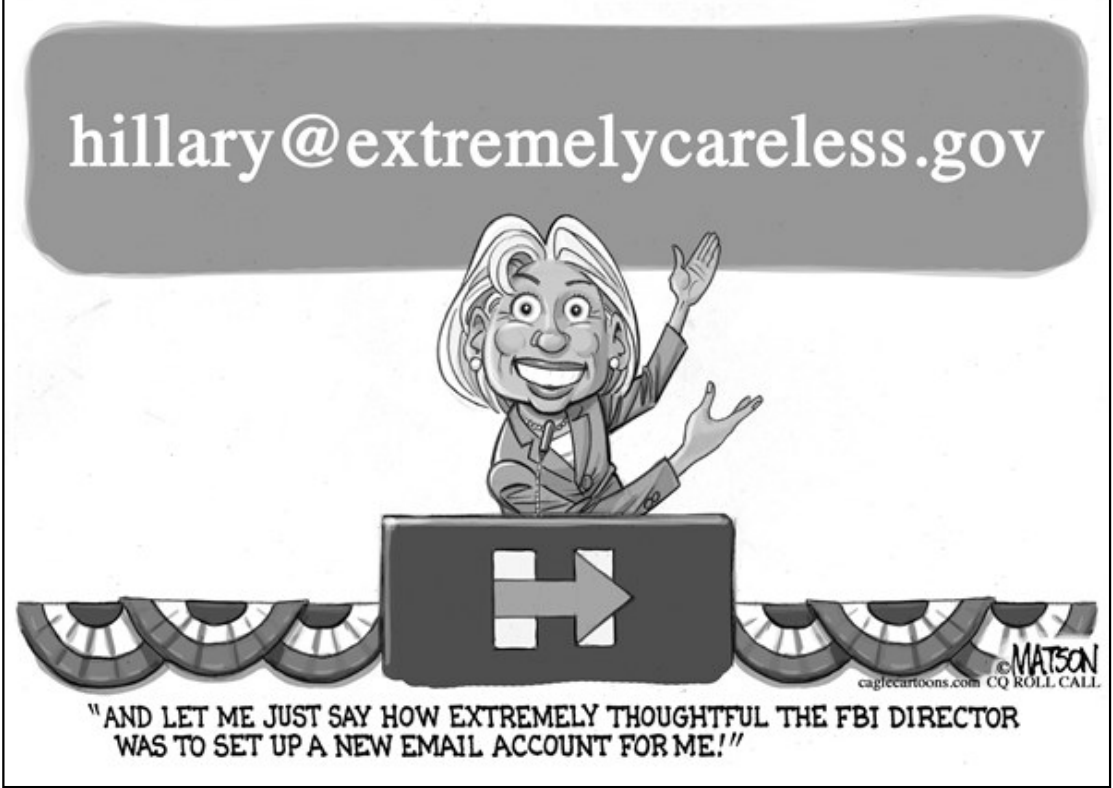

And that maybe, somehow, we are all implicated in this because of that.

But instead, I’m left with this: an empty hope for change, and, as always, a notebook full of questions that will likely never be answered.

EDITORIAL

Was making arrest at a funeral really necessary?

By now, social media and arm-chair pundits have either vilified or praised law enforcement and the deceased victim of an arrest gone wrong last Thursday in Douglas. The shooting by U.S. marshals at St. James Catholic Church following Joe Ramirez’ funeral was horrific. No one can dispute that. The family and community were instantly traumatized, as, we are sure, were the law enforcement personnel involved in the shooting of Jasen Scott Ramirez as he tried to leave his father’s funeral.

Reaction throughout the community and state was angry and swift, even as any facts had yet to be reported, not that every facet and fact of a police action ever is fully released, but people jumped to conclusions that may or may not be proven accurate in the days and weeks ahead.

Many people were quick to condemn police for doing their job; we are not among them, albeit for one decision that remains perplexing — the timing. Law enforcement, especially in this era of home-grown terrorism, have the unenviable job of trying to keep us all safe while protecting (or at least not violating) our civil rights and liberties.

It is a daunting task even on the best of days.
Last Thursday was not a “best of days.” Instead, it was a dark day for law enforcement and the community, and it was a horrific, unfathomable one for the Ramirez family and friends. Blaming the U.S. marshals, or alternatively praising them, at this juncture is problematic at best, except for one fact we do know. The marshals were at the funeral doing surveillance on Scott. They were doing their job.

But, did they really need to try to arrest him in the church parking lot? Did they really need to endanger the 50 or so people at the funeral? It seems, even this early into the official investigation, that the answer is no, they did not. What was so critical at that moment that the plain-clothed agents had to move in to make the arrest and endanger other people?

What we don’t know, and may never know, is what triggered the federal agents to move in. Scott, by all official accounts so far, was wanted on drug charges, but he had ancillary charges of being a felon in possession of a gun. The marshals had a reasonable fear that he may have had a weapon in his vehicle.

Was that fear enough to warrant putting dozens of innocent men, women and children at risk? We think not.

Business in Las Vegas

O.K. yes, I am headed to Vegas this weekend. No it is not for a bachelorette party. No it is not for a wedding. No it is not because I am turning 21, again.

There are four of us going — grandma, two ladies the age of my mom, and myself.

Our shirts have collars and our shoes have slide plates.

We will probably joke that our balls are bigger than yours.

We will freshen up on the rules and we will roll our balls down the lane, and pray it is not a 7/10 split.

Yes, that’s right, I am head to Las Vegas to bowl.

For the first time in more than 30 years, the world’s largest participatory sporting event for women is underway in Las Vegas.

This year’s USBC Women’s Championships is the first major USBC tournament to be held in the new $35-million South Point Bowling Plaza.

The Women’s Championships previously was held in Las Vegas in 1973 and 1983, when it was contested at the famous Showboat Lanes.

It is slightly bigger than my home alley, the House of Pinz — only with 60 lanes with two parallel rows of 30 lanes, a 360-seat viewing area and a 720-unit locker room.

In addition, the USBC tournament bowling-focused center includes a 350 seated squad room equipped with a team photo booth area, stub lane, ball check station and bracket room.

No big deal. HA!
I admit, I am a competitive person, but even the most competitive can be a little nervous. I mean there are a few of us hitting the lanes. More than 20,000 bowlers compete at the USBC Women’s Championships.

The tournament is the highlight of the bowling season for USBC female members. It’s a vacation, as well as an opportunity to compete in one of the sport’s most prestigious tournaments.

I have told many people I am headed to Vegas. “Going to get tore up, huh?” they say with a laugh.

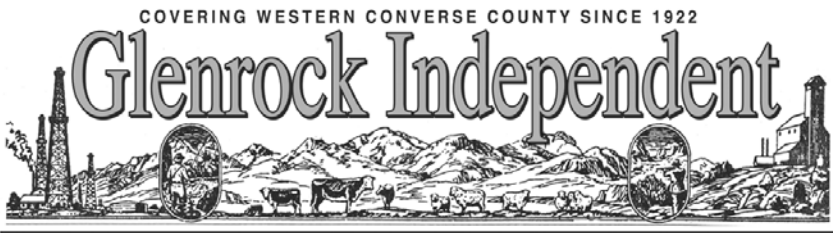

While I can’t deny that my trip will include booze, my main reason to go is to compete. I am pretty excited about this opportunity. Plus, it’s my first trip to the national tournament (but not my first Vegas outing).

Many people have no idea that I am bowling competitively. When I tell them, the common response is, “I had no idea you did that.”

I guess the response is because I don’t bowl to toot my own horn, I bowl for the enjoyment of the sport and the camaraderie of those around me.

I thoroughly enjoy my women’s team. These ladies are a joy to be around. The memories we have made and the laughs that we share, just keep coming. Now, I can’t let my fellas down, I also enjoy my mixed team with the boys. But those are different memories.

But for now, I am headed to Sin City — to take care of business.

Next in Line

Until July 18, 1947, who would serve as President of the United States if the current President could not serve was unclear. Sure, there was the Vice President, but if he or she could not do it, who would be next in line?

Congress answered that question in 1947 with a bill explaining the line of succession. Should the current President be unable to serve, the Vice President would do it. Should the Vice President be unable to serve, the Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives would do it. Should the Speaker be unable to serve, the President Pro Tempore of the U.S. Senate would do it, and so forth down the line.

President Harry S. Truman signed the bill into law on July 18, 1947. There is no question who is next in line now.

Census

percent increase.

The Asian and Pacific Islander population, as well as those who identified by two-or-more races, saw a 23 percent or higher uptick.

Meanwhile, non-Hispanic whites saw growth, too, but at a pace of just 1.6 percent.

“Both the nation and Wyoming’s population continue to grow in diversity,” said Dr. Wenlin Liu, chief economist for Wyoming’s Department of Administration and Information’s Economic Analysis Division.

Still, the state remains the ninth whitest in the country.

The new estimates also show the state getting a little older.

The median age rose 0.2 to 36.9 between 2014 and 2015. Nationally, the median age rose from 37.7 to 37.8 during the same period.

“This is not a surprise because Wyoming’s downturn in the energy industry during the year resulted in thousands of layoffs and a reduction in employment,” said Liu.

The economist said that part of the aging is likely due to more people moving out of the state than moving into it because of the economy. That’s because, he said, movers tend to be a younger group.

“Whenever the state experiences overall negative net migration, the population aging will be faster,” he said.

Overall, the Cowboy State lost roughly 1,200 people between 2014 and 2015, the two latest data releases.

The number of people age 65 and older increased from 70,090 in 2010 to 84,699 in 2015, or 20.8 percent, according to the latest numbers.

That’s higher than the national growth rate of 18.6 percent during the same period.

Together, the elderly population, defined as those 65 and older, made up 14.5 percent of the state, slightly lower than the national average.

At the same time, however, during the five-year period, the population under 18 increased 2.6 percent.

According to the Economic Analysis Division, this figure is especially significant because the majority are elementary age and are the grandchildren of baby boomers.

“Wyoming has one of the highest proportions of the baby boom population (age 51 to 69 in 2015), and one of the lowest Generation X (age 35 to 50 in 2015) proportion in the country. Together with moderate employment growth, and the rural nature of the State, Wyoming may face a labor force shortage in certain fields and faster population aging in the future,” Liu said.

By 2030, the population in this category is expected to reach 138,100, or 25 percent of the state’s total population, as baby boomers age into it.

FACTS FROM FOSSILS

Amber and what it can contain has always fascinated me. I love amber but some of the items trapped inside the golden glow are spectacular. It gives us more clues about what was going on those millions of years ago.National Geographic in an article by Kristin Romey describes one of the newest and most spectacular pieces of amber. It is a rare specimen from almost 100 million years ago and encased in this hunk of amber they discovered two tiny bird wings, which included plumage (the layering, patterning, coloring and arrangement of feathers), seen in modern birds showing that they already existed in at least some ways before their modern ancestors. A study of the find was published in Nature Communications and was partly funded by the National Geographic Society’s Expeditions Council. The mummified wings are thought to be from enantiornithes, a group of avian dinosaurs. These miniature flyers became extinct at the end of the Cretaceous. The two samples weighed only 0.06 and 0.3 ounces, and they contain much information that is usually absent in parts of feathers preserved in amber, according to Lida Xing, a study co-author from the China University of Geosciences. They were able to study bone structure, tracts of feathers and soft tissue.The Burmese amber probably contains the largest variety of animal and plant life from the Cretaceous that has been discovered to date. Much of the beautiful amber, from the Hukawng Valley in mines in Myanmar, will never be available for study. The “golden sap” is sold to those who make it into jewelry and carvings and the plants and animals can be destroyed when they are polished. Lida hopes to obtain some of the amber when it comes into the markets and keep that specimen with research value in Myanmar to be studied by local universities.

The Smithsonian magazine just came out with one of the strangest stories. It is about an unknown and unrecognized paleontologist that literally taught himself geology, paleontology and evolution. He hailed from the area in Romania, which was made famous by “Dracula stories,” and we know it as Transylvania. If they ever did a movie of his exploits it might take at least a dozen episodes to give him credit for putting pieces of the puzzle together and being rejected by the scientific community. More on this amazing man next week. The Bone Biddy’s have been busy. We entertained over 470 guests during the month of June, including three groups of students and instructors from Douglas, three groups of Casper College Key Club with Russell, a group of students from Guernsey-Sunrise and 22 Scouts (Troop 520) from Iowa. We have two new Bone Biddy’s who are here from Arizona. Olivia and Haily and canine Wendell drop by to help out when they aren’t enjoying the outdoors. Lorna and Crissie have been re-stocking “The Gift Shoppe” and Lorna is receiving items for the Deer Creek Days Garage Sale.

If you are cleaning out your treasures, we will find a place for them. As always, Mary Kay is front and center, locating young gentlemen to help with the heavy lifting, and we are grateful that she and the young men are on our team.

Vipers cap historic season with 17-14 win over Dodgers

By Phillip Harnden
phill@glenrockind.com

A few short months ago 15 teenagers answered the call to be part of the first 5A baseball team in more than a decade. Today those same 15 young men have learned and grown into a team that others in the league are noticing. Beating the Dodgers 17-14 in the season finale Thursday night doesn't hurt, either.

Several players from Casper teams have expressed interest in playing for the Vipers next season, according to coach Allen Jennings.

The Vipers ended their regular season sixth out of eight teams after late season wins.

But this season is more than just a win-loss record or city championships to these boys.

It's about the game, the team and brotherhood on the field. It's about bringing a baseball from the brink of extinction in Glenrock.

Many of the 15 Vipers would not have had the opportunity to play at all if it weren't for the commitment.

Not every family has the means for the daily travel for a Casper team.

"I nearly quit this year," Noah Halsey said. "I was tired of playing for Casper teams and was going to stop playing. But when the Vipers started I knew I had to play for the home team. We may have started as underdogs, but we aren't anymore."

Alex St. Gelais slides safely into home plate helping with their victory over the Dodgers.

Noah is one of the team's starting players and in the pitching rotation.

Of course every team wants to win, but to Jennings there is another metric that is even more important.

"The true test of a successful season is how many of these boys come back next year," Jennings said. "We still have the same 15-player roster now as when the season started. Not one player has quit. With 15 on the roster it is never totally equal or fair on play time and they still all show up with a great attitude and ready to play."

Bryston Jennings is a dedicated 14-year-old player who has spent his summers on the diamond for as long as he can remember.

"As a team we learned how to never give up this season," Bryston said. "We have made huge improvements since the beginning of the summer. But we are feeling rested and ready to go win the city championships."

The team will face off against the Yankees after press deadline on Wednesday and play either at 6 p.m. or 8 p.m. on Thursday.

The double elimination tournament runs through Wednesday July 13. The tournament schedule is available at www.cybaseball.com.

But to these boys this season will always be special, win or lose.

Glendo gets stocked with walleye fry

An unexpected set of circumstances recently allowed surplus walleye fry from the Garrison National Fish Hatchery in North Dakota to be stocked into Glendo Reservoir. The Wyoming Game and Fish Department received and stocked over nine million walleye fry on June 6.

"Wyoming Game and Fish has a great cooperative trade agreement with the North Dakota Game and Fish," said Steve Sharon, Fish Culture Supervisor for the Wyoming Game and Fish. "We provide North Dakota with trout or trout eggs that are surplus in our culture program and receive warm and cool water fish in return. This is a win/win scenario for anglers in both states."

Garrison National Fish Hatchery had exceptional survival of walleye eggs this year. They were able to meet all their requests, and, in an unprecedented occurrence, still have a massive surplus of fry, or recently hatched juvenile fish.

"Recently we have seen poor walleye spawning success in Glendo. This is associated with high runoff years.

With Glendo being in flood storage again in 2016, and this exceptional opportunity from North Dakota, we considered stocking. The stars aligned and we stocked the fish in early June," said Game and Fish Fisheries Biologist Gordon Edwards.

Walleye were first introduced in Glendo in 1972 and last stocked in 1974 and for over 40 years the walleye population has been supported by natural recruitment.

"Our hope is these fry can hedge against another potentially poor spawning and recruitment year given the extremely high and cold spring inflows in Glendo Reservoir," said Edwards. "In this way we hope to jump start this regionally important walleye fishery".

Game and Fish will continue to evaluate the success of the fry stocked as they mature.

WYOMING

A page dedicated to the fascinating history of Wyoming

~ CARVED IN STONE ~

The earliest people to come to Wyoming appear to have come from Asia as many as 11,000 years ago. For thousands of years they roamed the plains and hunted big game: mammoths, giant bison and others. About 7,000 years ago a drought began that lasted 2,000 years, and bison and people seemed to have disappeared from the plains altogether. In Wyoming, the people moved up into the mountains where it was cooler and where there was water.

By 4,500 years ago people returned to the plains, often living in caves and rock shelters. They gathered plants, ground seeds, fished, and hunted small mammals, reptiles, and amphibians. By that time the giant bison had been replaced by the modern Bison bison - or what we call buffalo.

Around 500 A.D., people began using bows and arrows. They left rings of stones where they pitched their tipis and other evidence of their presence, such as ancient tools, weapons and other pieces of their existence.

And, they left pictures and carvings on rocks.

Carved over thousands of years by pre-historic groups who once lived throughout Wyoming, the petroglyphs and pictograms left by these peoples are a unique piece of Wyoming's history.

Throughout Wyoming's diverse and remote rock formations and landscapes, caves and outcroppings, there are documented and undocumented petroglyphs and pictographs to be found. (Petroglyphs are incised, chipped or carved onto rock walls, and pictographs are made by painting pigment on rock surfaces.) Hundreds have disappeared over time due to simple weathering, and unfortunately, some to vandalism.

Castle Gardens Petroglyph Site. Forty-five miles east of Riverton, Wyoming, thousands of years of wind, rain and snow has sculpted amazing shapes that resemble a castle on a hill. These unusual geological formations of bright, white-colored sandstone bears wonderful treasures: petroglyphs, also known as rock art.

The care and detail that went into these petroglyphs is amazing, and several elaborate techniques were used. There are several different styles as well. Those who came to the Castle Gardens to create their rock art throughout hundreds and hundreds of years were hunters that were passing through.

Once the Native Americans completed the rock art, the images would be painted with two shades of red, two shades of orange, white, black and green. The green paint is extremely rare in the Wyoming region, and makes the Castle Garden shield-style petroglyphs even more unusual.

The Castle Gardens sandstone outcroppings.

White Mountain petroglyphs.

Dinwoody Creek Petroglyphs. The Dinwoody rock art found on a few panels on private property along Trail Lake Road and Torrey Lake southeast of Dubois are similar to those seen at the Legend Rock State Petroglyph Site west of Thermopolis. The images are scattered over some distance and some are concealed behind trees, low shrubs and grass. Some images are difficult to make out due to heavy lichen growth over the exposed surfaces.

This Dinwoody Creek appears on a large boulder sitting high above the road and facing south. It appears as if it's guarding the lake below. Interior designs and several small circles on either side of the torso seem lined up to represent some type of calendar.

Legend Rock petroglyphs.

Legend Rock. Located about 20 miles from Thermopolis, Legend Rock contains at least 283 different petroglyphs on 92 individual sandstone panels. The illustrations depict human figures, animals and abstracts.

They're everywhere

Over time, petroglyphs and pictograms have been discovered throughout Wyoming. Many are on private land, and remain undocumented or researched. Others have been documented, recorded, researched, and their locations made official sites for the public to enjoy. Most have been found quite randomly by ranchers, hikers, campers, and hunters who accidentally run across them as they explored remote areas and rugged terrain. Others have been searched out by scientific study of migrations, ancient cultures, and even weather patterns.

Regardless of where (or how) they are found, each petroglyph tells its own unique story, and each petroglyph is an historic treasure. Picture the artists actually there, carving the sandstone, preserving and telling their stories about how they lived and events that occurred.

It's quite likely that a complete collection of each and every pictograph or petroglyph in Wyoming will ever be recorded. New discoveries are made constantly, and in many cases, the importance of the discoveries aren't recognized or acknowledged.

The sites mentioned herein are some of the better-known sites, but in reality, there are numerous locations in Wyoming that display the fascinating rock art that tell the stories of our state's earliest residents.
